Characterology, In the early 20th century Wilhelm Riche discovered the Characterology model. It has been studied and modified through out the course of the last century and proves to this day to be a powerful therapeutic model. From the time of conception the energetic patterning of the child begins and is affected by its environment. There are five distinct stages of development where wounding takes place as the child struggles to adapt and survive in its environment. The result of this early wounding form a patterned expression of self that transfers to all relationships and interactions in adult life. During this training we will study the patterns, wounding, and gifts of these five structures. We will explore ways of identifying these structures in ourselves and our clients. We will begin to learn to work with these structures and their statements of being, in order to help deeper facilitate a greater understanding of what it is to be human.
